

LaRouche: The Moustache Stays!

November 19, 2009 (LPAC)—In the 24-48 hours since it was publicly announced, the Obama administration's decision to deny mammograms to women between 40 and 50 years of age—to willfully promote the deaths of some percentile of American women, in order to cut costs—has caused a total national uproar. But let us, again, call this what it is, and say what no one else dares to say: "This is exactly what Adolf Hitler's initial policy was in September-October 1939, which led to the genocide as such later," Lyndon LaRouche stated today.

Are there still any idiots out there who are going to argue that LaRouche was "exaggerating" by exposing the Nazi intent of the Obama health reform, and putting the moustache where it clearly belonged?

"This thing is crucial," LaRouche said today. "This is probably one of the most crucial news events of the day, and of the week — the statement on the mammograms, and the policy it represents."

"We are at a point," LaRouche explained, "where the question is: How long will Obama remain a functional President of the United States? Because we see in this thing on the mammogram issue, where he defends the intent to promote the deaths of some percentile of women by denying them the mammograms which are so essential between the ages of 40-50, even for the saving of their lives. And saying that a certain number of persons must be allowed to die, as a percentile, in order to save money. That from the President of the United States as a policy?!"

"The awkward part about this thing is that this policy was cooked up, and it was planned to be introduced, but on the assumption that after October 1 the health care bill would have been voted up, and this would have been an also-ran. But they got caught because they didn't get the health care policy in by October 1, nor now, and now they come out with this thing, where this becomes the focus, and the people of America are about to kill Obama, or do something else to him.

"This guy has lost it. The President of the United States, who would let a thing like this go through, means that he or his whole team, collectively, have gone clinically insane in even suggesting such a thing. And the argument that only a certain number of women will be killed by his policy, goes together with the IMAC policy. The President's policy is to murder a certain percentile of the population for the sake of balancing the budget. Which is exactly what Adolf Hitler's initial policy was in September-October 1939, which led to the genocide as such later. And we have to treat it that way.

"The scandal that has arisen over the mammograms, is that the President of the United States essentially says that the policy is to kill, by withdrawing health services, a certain pre-calculated number of women, or percentile of women, for the sake of balancing the budget. There is no difference between that statement of policy, its utterance from the Presidency of the United States, and what Adolf Hitler did with his initial phase of mass murder in September and October of 1939.

"What did the mammogram scandal expose? It exposed the essence of the whole health care policy of the Obama administration, for which reason I put the moustache on the President. This is why the moustache stays: it stays for this reason."

LaRouche went on to discuss the most recent display of Obama's criminality and insanity during his Asia trip.

"The President, during his most recent trip, going through Southwest Asia, into China, into Japan, into Okinawa, the President was without his keeper—i.e., his wife Michelle. And he was a general embarrassment to the United States and to his hosts during much of these travels. There are signs, which we observe from the reports of his conduct during his travels, which indicate that there is an acute and rapid deterioration in the President's mental capacity.

"He created an embarrassment for the U.S. and for China, in China, but the Chinese hosts were gracious enough to cover it up for diplomatic reasons. He made a disgusting exhibit of himself in Japan, which will disgust any patriotic American citizen, that a President should bow and kowtow like that to a head of a foreign state—like an imperial submission. And he also travelled among the snakes of Okinawa, trying to create a mess in U.S. diplomacy during his visit, and trying to embarrass Defense Secretary Gates, trying to raise an issue which should not be discussed at all, because it involves delicate relations among the nations of Asia.

"So the President is insane, and his insanity is increasing. We are reaching a point," LaRouche elaborated, "where the U.S. and the Obama Presidency can no longer inhabit the same space for much longer. Our problem is to find a remedy for the U.S. which causes the least friction and risk involved. The point is, the object is—unless we can get some favorable improvement in the President immediately—we're probably moving to the point where the Vice President will be asked to step forward and be the President. And a lot of people around Obama immediately will go out of the administration, with that process, and some additional people will come in to supplement the people from the Obama administration who will remain in office. The option is to have the maximum stability, at a time when our objective should be to get the United States involved in the Four Powers leading partnership among the U.S., Russia, China, and India.

"The time has come, the reality is that if Obama continues in this direction, he's going to have to be retired. Impeachment is probably not the thing we're looking for;

we're looking for retirement, so as to avoid a prolonged, Woodrow Wilson-type embarrassment. And the solution would be to have the President officially resign, or have his keepers and medical advisors have him resign, and have the Vice President step forward, make a few adjustments, get rid of the pathological elements from the Obama administration, and continue. And go next to a recovery program based on Glass-Steagall purposes in commercial banking, a reorganization which will eliminate most of this bail-out nonsense, and start us on a recovery.

"The question is being posed to us for the early future: Can we salvage this Obama administration by getting it to drop its insane impulses, which are coming increasingly frequently? Or is the time coming when we simply are going to have to, to avoid a Woodrow Wilson-type crisis, simply say that the President should retire to pursue the recovery of his mental health, and let the Vice President step in?"
